Last Thursday, Singapore Airlines invited 40 of its PPS Club members to attend a wine-tasting dinner with Jeannie Cho Lee, who is a wine consultant to the carrier. Above, Lee (fourth from right) and airline officials pose for a photo.

Singapore Airlines hosted a wine-tasting dinner with Jeannie Cho Lee on Thursday, inviting 40 members of its exclusive PPS Club to attend.

Lee, a renowned wine consultant to Singapore Airlines and the first Asian to hold the Master of Wine title, gave a short speech and introduced six selected wines that the carrier serves on its flights. Various events including prize drawings and a photo session with Singapore Airlines' cabin crew followed the dinner, which was held jointly with Han Sung Motors.

"Whether you are traveling for business or leisure, I am sure you will enjoy both the new products on our latest aircraft and the unparalleled in-flight service provided by our dedicated cabin crew," said Wilson Yong, the general manager of Singapore Airlines in Korea.

Yong also thanked PPS members for their continued support and loyalty, adding that they have contributed to the carrier's success.
